Choosing a Marketing program at McGill University’s School of Continuing Studies?

If you are creative, possess good analytical and communications skills and have a good understanding of people, a career in marketing may be a good choice for you.

Today, successful organizations are measured by their ability to identify and satisfy the needs of their target market in a highly competitive environment. The essential aims of marketing operations are to determine the needs of the market, translate these needs into products, services or ideas and convert the demand for them into a desired response. To be successful in this field, you will be required to understand customer needs, product development, communication and pricing strategy as well as where to market goods and services.

The rise in online retailing over the next few years will require an understanding of the field of e-commerce and how to respond to international markets and cultures. Those pursuing a career in marketing research will be sought after as businesses become more and more competitive and the need for accurate and reliable data becomes crucial to giving companies that competitive edge.

As a marketing professional, you may be working in any of the following areas in for profit and non-profit organizations.

- Corporate Marketing
- Marketing Research
- Sales and Retailing
- Brand or Product Marketing
- Advertising
- Physical Distribution
- Online Retailing – E-Commerce
- Customer Service Management

Careers in marketing not only include the corporate world but also are more and more prevalent in the non-profit area. These may include the arts, culture, education, community development, environmental groups, foundations, government, health and social services, international aid and registered charities.

How can a McGill Program help prepare you for a Career in Marketing?

- Our programs will help you develop your skills and focus your abilities and aptitudes on the different aspects of marketing
- Our courses will give you an overview of a range of marketing functions so that you can generate initiatives of your own and contribute to corporate decisions as a valued member of an organizational team
- Our marketing programs will introduce to theories, practices and recent developments in the field of marketing, provide you with an opportunity to apply these in practical situations, and introduce you to professionals working in the field who will present up-to-date best practices.
- Our program helps prepare you for marketing positions in business, industry or not-for-profit organizations, or to make a career change.
