Topic: Animal Law
examine scholarly debates and legal issues concerning the many different ways in which humans exist in relation to animals.
The materials include a range of legal and interdisciplinary scholarship, encompassing both private and public law as well as domestic and international legal systems.
Our focus is on the equivocal status of animals within the context of anthropocentric legal systems. Binary legal distinctions between persons and property both structure and reflect human-centric relations between humans and animals, with sentient creatures typically classified as objects of property rather than subjects of law.
